TO: Inspector John McCoomb, Corporate Services

FROM: Senior Sergeant Michael Keller, Ballistics Unit

SUBJECT: STATUS OF VEKTOR PUMP ACTION RIFLES

---

1. An example of a Vektor pump action rifle was received for evaluation by the Ballistics Unit on 28 October 1997. The rifle received bore the serial number V 10336, was in new condition and chamber for .223 Remington ammunition.
2. These rifles are manufactured in South Africa. Although they are capable of accepting SKS/AK type magazines they do not substantially duplicate any military self-loading rifle in design, function or appearance.
3. The weapon is operated by a pump or slide action. This appears to be its original design intention, not a modification of a self-loading action. Although some repeating firearms, in particular pump or lever action weapons, may possess the potential to be converted, with varying degrees of difficulty, into self-loaders I do not consider that this alters their categorisation under the Weapons Act.
4. In the particular case of the Vector rifle I am of the opinion that, in the unaltered condition in which it was received, it falls within Category B of the Act. The knowledge and skills required to convert it to a Category D weapon would be far beyond that possessed by the vast majority of people.

Vektor H5 Galil
FOI RELEASE
OLD POLICE

The Vektor H5 is based on the South African Galil pattern assault rifle, there are some key differences however. The most noticeable is of course the pump action mechanism on the weapon itself. Unlike many commonly produced rifles today, the H5 is a pump action rifle which loads a new round into the chamber when the action is pumped. It comes with a fixed paratrooper stock or a thumbhole stock, it is capable of using higher capacity magazines but comes with standard 5 and 12 round box magazines with each sale.
